* * * Logging camps ain't what they used to be, I hear-they're better! In the west, many loggers live in town, nowadays, instead of in lum-ber camps. They drive to work-just as if they worked in an office or factory. And the forests are bet-ter managed, too-by using "selec-tive loggin" techniques, for in-stance. This means a forest will con-tinue to grow wood for centuries to come! For that matter, that's how I harvest timber on my tree farm,

In some places, they don't float logs downriver any more, either! Lots of companies have their own logging roads, for taking wood out of land that once was inaccessible. These roads are a big help in fightin' forest fires,
